I ADMIT I don't know many of Bryan Ferry's solo hits. But drawn by the few I did, I went along to the West Holts stage last night at Glastonbury Festival to see what else he had to offer.

There were points during the hour-and-a-half set where I wondered when he would play Love Is The Drug, the 1975 hit Love from Roxy Music's Siren album, and his solo hit and wedding dance floor filler Let's Stick Together.

But that isn't to say his other tracks, and his excellent and energetic live band and back singers, weren't enjoyable to watch. I listened along politely and found other hits like Slave To Love drew arm swaying from the audience – of which there few people under the age of 30
